

PERTIS (Permit to travel ticket Issuing System)

To discourage fare evasion, a Penalty Fares Scheme was introduced on the Fenchurch Street to Shoeburyness line in November 1988. Anyone travelling without a valid ticket was liable to a fine of £10. The scheme has since been extended to most of the former 'Network Southeast' area. Silverlink have since discontinued Penalty Fares, but machines are still in situ at their stations. A scheme also applies in the West Midlands area. The machines are identical to those used at 'Pay and Display' car parks. The AS-9 is mounted on a post or wall and the AS-88 is mounted on a pedestal. There is also an AS-89, but this is externally identical to the AS-88, and the tickets from all machines are identical. The AS-9 is only used on the Fenchurch Street to Shoeburyness line, but some have now been replaced by AS-88's. Almex was the original manufacturer of the machines, but after being taken over by Metric, this company's name now appears on the latest AS-89's.

Machines are normally only switched on when the ticket office is closed. Coins are inserted up to the amount required, a display shows the total value of coins inserted, a button is pressed and the ticket is issued.

Printed detail shows the station of issue, date, time and amount paid. Any excess due is paid on the train or at the destination.

Non-ASCII characters printed in error are shown as #.

BLUE TEXT INDICATES AN UPDATE SINCE 26TH MAY 2003.

Following the installation of ticket barriers at Guildford, free access between the main entrance and the cathedral entrance was not possible. The PERTIS machines at each entrance were then adapted to issue a permit to allow access across the footbridge. The permits are issued free of charge, the button only has to be pressed to issue a ticket.

GUILDFORD BRIDGE    01 01A        Both machines have shown 01
