

Shere SMART Terminal

Manufactured by Shere, these are the equivalent of APTIS – used in ticket offices and operated by booking clerks. They use orange-banded, APTIS-sized stock with the form reference RSP 9599. Unlike APTIS, the front has no pre-printed headings: all information is printed by the machine. The flexibility of having a blank front with no details allows the stock to be used for Day and Period Travelcards, Platform Tickets, Season Tickets, Excess Tickets and so on as well as travel tickets, eliminating the need for different blank stock for each type of ticket. Meanwhile, both orange bands are approximately the same width (top – 9mm, bottom – 10mm), as data is printed in one or both (according to the ticket type) – something which never happened on APTIS. There are other slight variations from APTIS as well, and the printed font is somewhat different.

Southern and Thameslink have opted for these to replace APTIS, and some have been on trial in the Bradford, Neath and Liverpool areas as well. Machines are numbered in the 5xxx series; the station's "own" NLC is shown on tickets, in contrast to some other New Generation systems which introduce new NLCs which are different from that shown on APTIS, Quickfare B8050 machines etc. At a location with one SMART Terminal, the window will be numbered 90; multi-windowed stations go upwards through the "90"s. So far, only one station – London Victoria – has had more than seven Terminals installed; in its case, its windows were numbered from 84 to 97 inclusive.

Text in GREEN indicates a machine that has been removed from the relevant location.
