

SSTIS (Small Station Ticket Issuing System)

The first machines were installed at Argyle Street and brought into use on 13th February 1980, followed by Glasgow Central Low Level on 14th February.

This machine was identical to the INTIS. Tickets were credit card size with round corners but were later changed to square corners. They were pre-printed for use as returns, but if used as a single, the machine printed a horizontal line across the left hand portion of the ticket. The station name was abbreviated if necessary on the right hand portion but shown in full on the left when used as a return. In most cases, a dash was used in place of any spaces within names.

Tickets were pre-printed with the destination station and were inserted into the machine for validation. The top line showed the date, ticket type, class, window number and the price followed by a letter indicating the method of payment. The second line showed the NLC of the issuing station, the NLC of the destination station, status, ticket number and status again. If a ticket was issued at a station for a journey starting from another station, the NLC's for all three stations would be shown as a twelve digit string, indicating issuing station, station from which ticket was valid from and the destination station.

The machines were later modified to issue INTIS tickets.
